To Whom It May Concern:

Jason Covington has been a member of our "call-staff" since January, 1996 to the benefit of both the college and our students. He has taught all three of our major writing courses: English 111 (the remedial course preparing students for college writing) English 131 (our Freshman Composition course which covers rhetorical methods and theme composition) and English 132 (the introduction to literary genres of poetry, drama, and the short story as well as the research paper).

His performance in the classroom has been exemplary: gently prodding, carefully supporting, and quietly analyzing the very personal aspects of the writing process. He has never missed a class. Perhaps one of his strongest assets as a college instructor is his ready wit and sense of humor which the students find reassuring in a course which is required for their future success in other college courses.

As administrator of the Communications program, I have found Mr. Covington to be an accurate record-keeper, conscientious grader, and prompt responder to requests for information about the student's progress. He has done his paper-work honestly and thoroughly. He has also adjudicated the occasional student complaint sensitively and satisfactorily from the student's perspective. I would heartily recommend Mr. Covington for service at your institution.

Please feel free to contact me for additional information.

Yours truly,

Thomas L. Fisher
