

How it feels to work in an office that doesn't fit.

Uncomfortable. Uneasy. And down-right miserable. It feels like you're wearing a suit bought for someone else.

Truth is, choosing office furniture that fits is as important as choosing clothes that fit. Because productivity studies show that office people who feel good about their working environment do better work. And more of it — up to 15% more in many documented cases.

Take a good look around your office.

Did you authorize the wrong furniture because the price was right? Does your company have uncomfortable seating and inappropriate desks that everybody hates?

If so, you can comfortably expect your staff to spend as much time trying to work as getting work done.

Next time you select office furnishings, remember how it feels to be uncomfortable, uneasy, and miserable for eight hours a day. Then come to Scott Rice, where you can choose from Kansas City's best selection of steel and fine wood furniture, in traditional and contemporary styles.
